Information

This document has been prepared by The Canadian Real Estate Association to assist REALTORS® by providing a resource to undertake additional due diligence with the view to minimizing the risk of criminal penalties and fines.

The regulatory analysis states “the regulations do not impose information collection, processing or reporting requirements on Canadian professionals, nor do they impose requirements with respect to the completion of forms or other types of documentation.”

Despite record keeping not being a mandatory obligation, CREA recommends REALTORS® perform due diligence. To better assist REALTORS® with risk mitigation, CREA has developed this certificate. With limited information available on how this law and its regulations will be interpreted and enforced, please be aware this certificate is a risk mitigation tool to try and help REALTORS® comply with the law.

As real estate is provincially regulated, REALTORS® should ensure to comply with any guidance provided by their provincial regulator, board, and association. This guidance herein is not a substitute for obtaining legal advice.

REALTORS® should ascertain the purchaser’s citizenship, residency, or exempt status by reviewing and recording details of the purchaser’s valid and current identification (such as a passport). This Certificate can be completed in conjunction with the above noted guidance with respect to identification. If REALTORS® choose to use this resource, it should be completed prior to assisting or advising a client with respect to the purchase of Residential Property, as defined by the Act. For greater clarity, key terms are defined below.
